Mr. Barksdale Spoke at Length In the Senate Saturday.

HE WILL DO FOR AMHERST

Attacks the Regularity of the Procedure, and Holds that Campbell Was Persecuted by His Personal Enemies.

When the amended joint resolution removing Judge C. J. Campbell came up on its passage in the Senate on Saturday, there was but one speech on the merits of the case, and that by Mr. Barksdale, of Halifax, who spoke for something more than an hour. Mr. Barksdale reviewed the case from its inception to the close, asying that the memorials to the General Assembly in the first instance embraced but the one charge, that of attacking Crawford, but that the prosecutors had some here with half a dozen charges, all of which grew out of the antagonisms of Judge Campbell's political career, and were formulated and pressed by those whom the judge had defeated for office. He especially impressed the senators with the fact that the present delegate from Amherst had been elected after a campaign in which Judge Campbell was the saue and the only issue. The county of Amherst had been dragged for complains and charges against Campbell. The speaker expressed the belief that there were few men who had been active in politics as long as Campbell against whom an array of charges could not be drawn by political and personal enemies. Were the searchlight turned on all the other judges of the State and on those active in politics, in this city, there would be an exodus comparable only to that winessed when Richmond was evacuated.

"Good Work for Amherst." "Good Work for Amherst."

"Clarence Campbell may not be a pro-und lawyer nor a perfect man, but he good enough for Amherst," said the speaker.

Mr. Barksdale took up the several charges and severely attacked the evidence adduced in support of these charges. He criticised the House Comdence adduced in support of these charges. He criticised the House Committee for broadening the scope of the inquiry after the judge had been notified. He attacked the legality of the evidence, the bringing or charges after the notice had been served and after the evidence was all in, and declared that the entire procedure had been remarkable.

Mr. Barksdale admitted that he d'd not expect to influence a single vote.

"The cedict has gone forth," said he, "that Clarence Campbell is to be offered, as a vocarious sacrifice on the altar of political and personal projudice."

The speaker did not impugn the motives of any senator in the vote he would cast on this matter.

this matter. n concluding, Mr. Barksdale referred In concluding, Mr. Barksdale referred to a statement attributed to Congressman William A. Jones, wherein he was quoted as saying that the political fate of the men who voted to retain Campbell would be pronounced by the people. This was construed as in the nature of a threat. He (the speaker) had himself been threatened, but he would not be deterred from doing what he conceived to be right by any fear of consequences. He believed that the procedure in this case had been irregular and illegal and he would not vote for the removal of the judge. He merely desired to make his protest against the action of the General Assembly and explain his vote.

explain his vote. Mr. Bryant's View.

Before the vote on the removal of Judge Campbell by the Senate, several senators made brief explanations of their rotes. Mr. Bryant, of Henrico, was the list speaker. He said: "My belief is that the House was irreg-

"My belief is that the House was irregular in its procedure, and my opinion is that the method marked out by what is known as the McIlwaine resolution [8] proper; certainly, if the amendment to that resolution proposed by myself were adopted. I hoped that the General Assembly would proceed regularly and in order to remove Judge Campbell, as I believe it could and would have done, without delay, under the McIlwaine resolution, with by amendment, which made the evidence taken by the House Committee legal evidence. I am satisfied from such evidence as I have heard and seen that Judge Campbell is not a fit person to be a judge, and that his removal will do him no injustice, however irregular the proceedings. I shall yote to remove him, I regret that we shall by this means establish a bad precedent, which I fear will grise to disturb us hereafter."

Mr. Halsey, of Lynchburg, who was paired against the McIlwaine resolution on Friday with Mr. Cromwell, who favored it, thus explained his vote on the several propositions before the Senate yesterday:

"I desire to say in explaining the vote I am about to cast in favor of the resolution of remoyal that I consider that the proceedure would now be legal, the Anderson amendment, setting forth the gauge of removal having been adopted and further that wo of the alleged with the gauge of removal having been adopted and further that wo of the alleged in the proceedure would now be legal, the and further that we of removal having been adopted and further that wo of the alleged have a rummaga sale, beginning Wednesday morning, on Main Street near Nineteenth. Mr. Bhands, of Southampton, stated that Mr. Halsey had stated his position

Mr. Opic stated that he favored non-proncurrence in the bare resolution sent ever from the House and requiring the resolution to go back to the House and the case to be tried properly.

Mr. Wallace expressed the opinion that the proceeding had been irregular, but when it came to a vota for or against the removal of Judge Campbell, he deemed it his duty to vote for removal.

Mr. Sale, of Norfolk city, stated that ed it his duty to vote for removal.

Mr. Sale, of Norfolk city, stated that the unanswerable argument of Mr. McIlwaine had raised a doubt in his mind as to the regularity and legality of the House procedure, and that as he believed that the entire action of the Senate was illegal, he would vote "no." He held to the theory that it was better that al thousand guilty men should escape justice than that one innocent one should be punished. He was of opinion that the General Assembly in a proceeding such as this should be governed by the same rules of evidence required by the courts.
Mr. Harvey said: "I expect to vote 'no' on the resolution of removal, and shall make no apologies for my vote.
My reason and conscience tell me that I am right in the position I have taken. I shall vote without reference to the merits of the charges. I have not the legal evidence to guide me in voting thereon."

Dr. Lear Says He Will Recognize Friends There.

HIS SERMON ON SUNDAY

Pastor of Centenary Gives Affirmative Answer to Question Which Has Attracted Consider Attention Here.

At Centenary M. E. Church Sunday night the Rev. Dr. W. W. Lear preached to a large audience on a subject which has recently excited great interest here ered, there is not, among the Methodist pastors, a unanimity of epinion.

Dr. Lear spoke from Hebrews, xii: 22 24, and his subject was "Do Souls in the Future World Meet and Recognize Those With Whom They Have Been Associated in This Life?" To this question the pasfor of Centenary gave an affirmative answer, flanked by able arguments from several points of view. PERPETUITY OF MEMORY.

His first argument was based on the believe in the future life at all will ad-

His first argument was based on the perpetuity of memory. He said all who believe in the future life at all will admit this. All those passages of Scripture that refer to life as a probation, that speak of the future life as a time when we shall reap what we sow here, or that we shall then "give an account of the deeds done in the body," as well as all descriptions of the future judgment proceed on the assumption that memory shall corry over into the world beyond this. The preacher dwelt especially on the judgment scene, as depicted in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, and then went on to prove that we shall not only remember in the future life the circumstances and happenings of this present life, but that memory will be wonderfully quickened and strengthened.

The second point was that we shall be together in one place. Here he cited passages in the Old Testament that speak of the patriarchs as "gathered to their fathers," "gathered to their people," &c. The New Testament, he said, is still more explicit. The Master, just before He left the earth, said: "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and propare a place for you, and if I go and propare a place for you unto myself, that where I am there may yo be also." Paul, speaking of that coming, said: "The dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be ever with the Lord." So elsewhere heaven is spoken of as a home, the redeemed as a family, and in the text we have a pleture that sets forth the same place, and not only retain our memories, but have them wonderfully quickened, how can we help knowing those that we have known here?

He said that some people hold that spirits in the future world will be without form, and others that we shall be so marvelously changed as to bear no resemblance to our former selves. If this were true, we might still have some way to search out one another. But such an idea has not a particle of basis, eithe of future recognition." Here Dr. Lear cited the cases of the rich man and Lazarus, of Samuel's appearance to Saul and of Moses and Elias on the Mount of Pransfiguration, eaying that whatever views we might have about these cases, they clearly established the truth of the doctrine under discussion.

LAW OF CONTINUITY.

The last point was an argument drawn from what is called the "Law of Continuity." a law that runs through all time and space, and assures us that God will do nothing inconsistent with wisdom and goodness, and that whatever happens will be that for which there has been a preparation. Under this head Dr. Lear held that without future reunion God's dealings with us here would in large part be not only meaningless, but little less than a mockery. That the social instinct was God-given; that the whole arrangement into circles and families tended to foster the desire for fellowship and to strengthen, from the cradle to the grave, our attachment one for another, and so to cultivate in those who had been separated an intense longing to meet again. He declared that it was simply impossible to believe that a God who is infinite in wisdom and goodness, who never made an He declared that it was simply impossible to believe that a God who is infinite in wisdom and goodnees, who never made an eye without spreading before it pletures of beauty, who never made a ear without filling it with music, who never put into beast or bird an instinct or in man an appetite without some object to satisfy it, should implant in the human heart and cultivate through long years this strongest, highest and intensest of all longings, simply to disappoint it in the end.

The preacher closed with a tender appeal to his hearers to bear in mind the paramount importance of the future world, and begged them to let its claims have precedence over those of the fiesh. The sermon was listened to with undivided attention by the large audience present, and many expressions of approciation were heard at its close. to believe that a God who is infinite for
